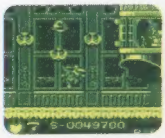
Now Darkwing will go anywhere to quack a case.

It will be crime time forever in St. Canard if F.O.W.L. has their way. Of course, Darkwing Duck has his own ways to cook their goose. But first he must make it through 7 very dangerous levels, where Steelbeak, Quackerjack and Mega Volt are ready and waiting. This is one case where winging it just won't do.



Watch out for Steelbeak's flying eggs, or you'll be fried forever.

Better move fast, 'cause these turtles are anything but slow.

SICK AS A DOG

I went to Iowa last summer. I liked it, but it was really hot. My brother felt so sick he threw up on a prairie dog. Besides my brother, I have a sister, mother and father. I have a Nolan Ryan Rookie of the Year Baseball Card worth $2.58.

YOUNG EXPLORERS

I have enclosed a picture of me and my best friend Peter at the Tunica, Louisiana, falls where we go every spring. It is about eight miles from my house. The October 1992 issue's hiking tips helped me a lot. I plan to use those tips next spring on our hike. I also have found a place using your tips and named the place Coyote Rock. Are you planning to have a Secret Spot Contest?

Ricky Honeycutt, 13

Great idea, Ricky! And maybe we'll have the spot king, Marsupilami, judge it. We'll keep you posted.

Hi! I want to be a movie director/producer. I'm already making movies with a video camera. I call my production company Hodge Podge Productions. Ever try to tell a pair of twins apart? In the January 1993 issue of Disney Adventures on Page 11, we got all mixed up. Seems we confused Jeremy London with his twin brother Jason. Fact is, Jeremy plays guitar and writes folk songs and would be a psychiatrist if he wasn't an actor. Sorry, guys.

What can I do if I'm worried about the rain forest?

Use Gale's Encyclopedia of Associations at your public library and jot down names and addresses of organizations that are trying to protect the rain forest. Then write letters to these organizations requesting information and ideas. Soon you'll have pictures, scientific data, plus examples of kids who've raised money and purchased an acre or two of a rain forest.

Concerned high-school student Kristin Johnson started her own speakers' bureau. She and a few friends travel to neighboring schools to talk about the rain forest. For a copy of her speech, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to R.A.I.N., 18802 185th Avenue NE, Woodinville, WA 98072.

BRENDA FROM "90210" ◊ KEEP AMERICA BEAUTIFUL MONTH.

COOL KID

riding the wheel!

Thirteen-year-old Annabel Marcillo started riding a unicycle—one of those one-wheel jobbies—at age 9. Now she rides in 21 parades a year, competes in National Unicycle Meets and won first place in the freestyle competition last year. D.A. Buzz caught up with Annabel for a quick talk.

D.A.Buzz: What made you to want to learn how to ride a unicycle?

A: I saw some unicyclists in a parade, and I really liked what they were doing. So I called up and found out where they practiced. Then I started going to practices.

D.A.B.: What's it like when you fall?

A: When you fall, you usually land on your feet. I have some scars on my knees, but that's about it.

D.A.B.: Do you have to have strong legs to ride a unicycle?

A: No. If you can ride a bike, you can ride a unicycle.

D.A.B.: What tricks can you do?

A: I can ride backward, "walk the wheel" (move the wheel with my feet to make it go instead of pedaling), pedal standing up and ride one-footed.

D.A.B.: What was your most embarrassing moment?

A: One time when I was practicing with my club, I really wanted to beat this one guy. But right before the finish line I fell flat on my face and scraped my knees really bad. I was so embarrassed I just stayed there, face-down on the pavement, right in front of the finish line.

D.A.B.: How fast can you go?

A: About as fast as a kid can run.

We even had celebrity visitors: Goofy and Darkwing Duck, Mark-Paul Gosselaar ("Saved By the Bell"), Curnal Aulisio ("Who's the Boss?"), Alisan Porter (Curly Sue), Linda Larkin (the voice of Princess Jasmine in Aladdin) and Jason Marsden ("Almost Home"). Your Guide to TV, Movies, Music and Books

Hungry Huck and Big Jim catching dinner.

You saw him in Forever Young and Radio Flyer. Now Elijah Wood struts his stuff as the mischievous Huck in The Adventures of Huck Finn. You know the story—it's about Huck's infamous trip down the mighty Mississippi with his friend Jim (Courtney B. Vance)....In The Meteor Man, an inner-city school teacher is given magical powers as a result of a meteor shower. Look for Bill Cosby as "the homeless wizard" and eccentric owner of a ragtag pack of mutts. Top rap stars Another Bad Creation, Cosby's friends are poker-faced in The Meteor Man.

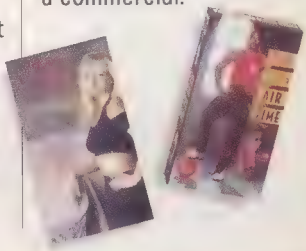
Big Daddy Kane and others add to the magic. ...Josh and S.A.M. takes you on a journey across the U.S. of A. Twelve-year-old Josh convinces his younger brother Sam that he is a "Strategically Altered Mutant" who must run away from home to be safe from the government.

Kelly Taylor on "90210" thinks shopping counts as exercise, but Jennie Garth the actress doesn't buy it! She huffs and puffs through Jennie Garth's Body in Progress. Even her bangs get sweaty....And for the armchair exerciser: Goals Galore shows the world's greatest soccer stars kicking over 100 goals in 20 minutes, set to cool tunes....In Michael Jordan Air Time, you'll see the basketball superstar on the court in the Olympics. Plus you get a behind-the-scenes look at Jordan in the locker room, at home, eating dinner, even filming a commercial.



DO YOU KNOW PINOCCHIO?

Recognize this guy? Pinocchio's been around for more than 50 years and shows no signs of slowing down. Let's see how good your memory is:

1. At the beginning of the film, wood-carver Geppetto looks out the window and wishes upon a star. What was he wishing for?

2. How do Pinocchio and the gang manage to escape from the inside of the whale?

Stumped? Check out the new video release of Pinocchio, due in video stores at the end of March. (If you're impatient and need to know now, score the answers on Page 15.)

MUSIC

They look like Boyz II Men. They sound like Boyz II Men. For a while, everybody thought they were Boyz II Men. But they're not. They're an R&B quartet named Shai (pronounced "shy"). Shai sent a sample of their song to a few radio deejays who realized they had a chartbuster. "If I Ever Fall in Love" zoomed to number one after that....Maurice Starr—the guy who made New Edition and NKOTB mondo stars—has put together an R&B-soul-funky-sounding group. They're Classic Example, and their first single is "I Do Care."...We know you're not supposed to talk to strangers, but Charles and Eddie obviously didn't, and now they have one of the catchiest tunes around. They both collect old '60s soul records, and one day they were sitting across from each other on a subway in New York. Charles just bought a rare soul album, and when Eddie saw it, they started talking. Before they knew it, they were teamed up and in the studio recording their hit single "Would I Lie to You?" Listen for their new single "NYC."

Classic Example cures.

BOOKS

You've seen the TV shows, but have you read the books? Turn off the tube, head for the library and get ready for a real surprise—the book is actually better than the show.

▲ You've probably seen reruns of "Little House on the Prairie" on TV countless times, but how many times have you read the books? Laura Ingalls Wilder's tales of life in pioneer America are so cool they make us want to live in the 1800s. Start with Little House in the Big Woods, and you probably won't want to stop until you reach The First Four Years....

▲ "Avonlea" is one of the coolest "old-fashioned" shows on TV. The Anne of Green Gables books by L. M. Montgomery will give you the scoop on what happened in Avonlea before the TV show. You'll love being able to time-travel to Prince Edward Island in Canada with this redheaded orphan girl.

▲ You can see Ramona in Mystery Meal/Rainy Sunday, Perfect Day/ Bad Day and Squeaker Foot/ Goodbye Hello at the video store, but Ramona's more of a pest in the books. D.A.'s fave: Ramona & Her Father. That's the one where Ramona's cat Picky Picky eats a jack-o'-lantern. (Ramona the Pest, Ramona the Brave and Ramona Forever are total fun, too!)

Mad Dog, the superhero on TV's "Bob," has a new comic book. Check this out: Every issue gives you two Mad Dogs for the price of one. Half of the book features Harlan Stone's Mad Dog. Turn it over, and you get wacky Bob McKay's version, including Mad Dog's sidekick, Buddy, the Bravest Boy in the World....Lo, there shall come a—Bartman? Yes, the ever-squabbling Simpsons finally get their own comic book. Bart becomes Bartman, Avenger of Evil, and meets his hero, Radioactive Man. Itchy and Scratchy give their hints for power-tool safety. Maggie saves Springfield. And to the amazement of no one, Homer eats a donut.

BOLDLY GO

REPORTERS ERIN DEAN AND MALCOLM BEDELL

WHEN WE WERE INVITED ON AN exclusive behind-the scenes tour of "Star Trek: The Next Generation," we were totally psyched! We got so much material, this sneak-peek article is going to be in two parts—so don't miss the next issue of D.A.! First stop: Soundstage 16 (left). It's a "swing set" that changes with every show. This episode, the set was half jungle, half barren planet.

WHERE NO

HAVE GONE

Klingon Make Over

For Klingons, their makeup call can be as early as 4 a.m., 'cause it takes about two hours to do their makeup. They usually use really tall, large actors for Klingons. They call the head gear a "turtle shell."

"Why is Worf's child's hair straight when all the other Klingons' hair is curly?"—Erin Because Worf is Klingon and his wife is half-Klingon.

"Why is Worf's hair short when all the other Klingons have long hair?"—Malcolm
Because being in Starfleet is like being in the military. You have to be neat. You have to keep your hair like in a crew cut, Klingon style.

KIDS BEFORE

"This is neat—right now we're two of the few kids who know that there're no real buttons. They're just part of the wall."

ERIN

1 ACTION! A loud buzzer sounds when they begin filming. While the scene is being filmed, a red warning light stays on.

2 CHOW TIME. The actors usually have to be on the set by 7 a.m.; earlier if they have a makeup call. Lunch is always six hours after they start filming.

3 TRICK TRICORDERS. Dr. Crusher's instruments, called tricorders, are hand-held computers. There are two kinds, plastic and wood. A plastic tricorder is used in scenes where the tricorder is in action: It's heavier and has flashing lights. In rehearsal or when it's on Dr. Crusher's belt, it's wood.

4 SUBSPACE STATION. The swing set was transformed into a remote subspace relay station for a recent episode. This is where Geordi fell in love with a Starfleet captain with a mysterious past.

FIRST SET WE VISITED: the captain's quarters. There is a circular fish tank protruding from one wall. Erin said, "I always wondered if that fish tank was real." It is—it has a real tiger fish named "Dr. Livingstone." He's poisonous.

"Data's makeup is incredibly glittery."

MALCOLM

▼ THE ACTORS have to rehearse long and hard for each show. "It's amazing that guys can push buttons that aren't real and still look convincing." —Malcolm

Geordi FLYING BLIND

Our D.A. reporters found out that the visor isn't the only cool thing about Lieutenant Commander Geordi La Forge. LeVar Burton, who plays Geordi, is an award-winning actor and a real cool guy.

Would you like to see Geordi's sight permanently restored?
If it meant him seeing like everyone else, I'm not sure that would be a good thing, because Geordi sees more than everybody else right now.

How?
He sees all of the electromagnetic spectrum—from infrared to X-ray. He sees a hundred million times more than normal human beings do. And he sees it all simultaneously. Believe me, his condition is an advantage. More than anything else, it's just a part of who he is.

What about that thing on your head? Is it hard to see through?
Well, the thing on my head is a VISOR—that stands for Visual Input Sensory Optical Reflector. When I put the VISOR on, I can barely see what's going on on the set. We attach it by screwing it into my head.

You screw it into your head? You mean like through your skin?
Well, we try not to screw it in so hard that it actually punctures the skin. It stays on by pressure. If I wear it too long I get a headache.

I know they make Geordi's eyes white by using contact lenses when he takes off his VISOR. Can you see when you wear those?
No. The lenses are so thick and opaque, I'm completely blind.

Is it scary?
It can be scary, but it's also exciting. When I put the contact lenses in and I'm blind, it's those moments when I have the most in common with Geordi. Because when Geordi takes the VISOR off, he doesn't see anything either. I'm experiencing the world just as Geordi would.

Why isn't Geordi on the bridge anymore?
In the first season he was the pilot. But the ship is so sophisticated that the producers said it could fly itself. So the problem was, what is Geordi's contribution? For information we go to Data. For anything having to do with emotions, Troi is the expert. Captain Picard is our leader and father figure. Commander Riker is his right-hand man. We decided to try Geordi out in the engineering department, and that really worked out well.

BIG Adventures

YOU'RE STANDING ON THE EDGE OF THE BOAT, and the ocean looks enormous. It's dark. It's cold. But you take a deep breath, step off the edge and... splash! Below you, a large shark suddenly slips out of the shadows. You blink, and it's gone. You swim deeper and get tangled in green, slimy kelp. Just as you pull free, a moray eel slithers by, flashing its teeth. To your right, a school of brightly colored fish darts past. You follow them, and they lead you to an underwater cave. What's inside, you don't know. It's just the beginning of your adventure...

UNDERWATER

Jason Jr. peers into a window.

TECHNO-

[illegible] explorers and [illegible] high-tech games to make deep-sea discoveries.

YOUR TINY, CRAMPED submarine is falling fast through freezing, dark water. There's more than a mile of water above you, and the ocean floor is still farther down. Then, a piercing alarm goes off—sea water is leaking in the batteries, which might shut down all your power! Do you panic?

Marine scientist Dr. Bob Ballard didn't when this very thing happened to him. He was in Alvin, a three-person submarine made to withstand huge underwater pressures. His destination was The Titanic—a huge luxury ship that sank in 1914. Dr. Ballard and his two companions caught only a glimpse of the enormous sunken ship before they had to go back to the surface. They barely made it.

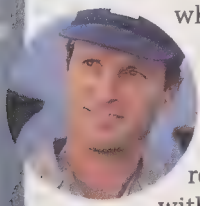
A year before this nerve-wracking dive, Dr. Ballard used a funny-looking contraption, Argo, to find the long-lost Titanic. Argo, a big video camera attached to a steel sled, was tied to the back of a research boat and dragged along the ocean floor, recording what it saw.



ARGO PICKED UP images of the sunken ship, so the team returned the next year with Alvin, Argo and Jason Jr., or "J.J."—a remote-controlled robot with video cameras and mechanical arms. J.J. was invented to explore places too deep for people or too dangerous for Alvin. This "swimming eyeball" could go inside The Titanic.

With help from a diver controlling the joystick, J.J. sneaked down the ship's Grand Staircase and saw chandeliers; stuck his "head" through windows and found furniture, silver and bathtubs; and spotted a doll's head, luggage and unbroken glass windows. It was the first look inside the doomed ship in 71 years—thanks to our techno-gizmo friends!

FUNKY

A CORAL REEF IS A HUGE, COLORFUL place where fish love to hang out, and the 1,200-mile Great Barrier Reef in Australia is the grandaddy of them all. There's lots of sun, food and other saltwater creatures to hang with. And no one cares what you look like—especially if your neighbors are these guys!

Butterflyfish

Which end is up? Butterflyfish often have similar markings on their heads and tails, so enemies don't know where they're coming from!

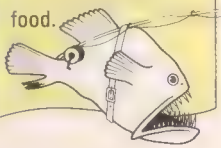
The parrotfish makes its own sleeping bag every night. It secretes a sticky substance around its body. This mucous cocoon masks its scent so predators sniffing out a snack go hungry.

Parrotfish

SOMETHING FISHY

The dragonfish has a glow-in-the-dark piece of skin that looks like a worm dangling just in front of its gaping mouth. It's used to attract food.



FISH

Clownfish

The clownfish and sea anemone are best buds. The clownfish is the only fish that can swim among the anemone's deadly stinging tentacles without getting hurt. If another fish swims in to grab the clownfish, zap! It's anemone dinner. The clownfish takes care of the leftovers.

SOMETHING FISHY

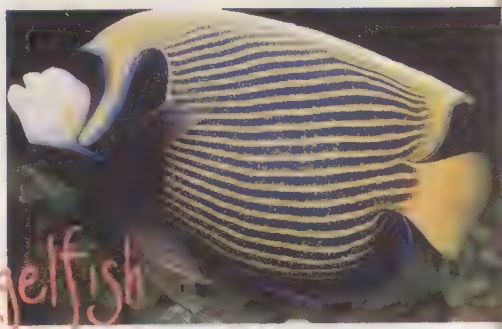
The brightly colored sea slug sleeps in its own slimy mucous. These slime cocoons really stink, so other fish keep away.

Stonefish

The 10-inch-long stonefish is the most poisonous fish in the world. Take one guess where it gets its name. It's covered with warts and green algae, so it looks like stone. But step on one of its sharp spines and you could die.

SOMETHING FISHY

Bluefish don't just kill to eat—they often kill because they like to. Long after their hunger is gone, they continue to slaughter, leaving shredded, half-eaten fish in their path.



Angelfish

The angelfish is no angel! When this fish twists and turns, flashing its bright colors, the message is: "Back off, Bub! I'm the Terminator, and this is my territory!" When other fish catch sight of this, they swim the opposite way. Fast!

SOMETHING FISHY

Night-feeding fish and cave fish have no eyes! But they sure can sniff out a meal: What they lack in sight they make up for in noses.

Any predator chomping down on a porcupinefish will get a sharp surprise. When attacked, this spiny puffer takes several big gulps of water. This puffs up its body to three times its normal size and makes needle-like spines on its back stand out. Ouch!

SEE: AN ANIMAL THAT EATS SAND!

YOU WON'T BELIEVE YOUR EYES!

A SEA CUCUMBER is really a slimy, sausage-shaped animal that eats tiny bits of food in grains of sand. This strange character is sometimes called the "vacuum cleaner of the sea" because of the way it sucks up sand to get dinner.

SEE: AN ANIMAL TURN ITSELF INSIDE OUT!

The table manners of a SEA STAR are gross—but effective. First, it uses the suction cups on its arms to pry open the shell of an oyster or clam. Then it pushes its stomach out through its mouth to engulf the unlucky inhabitant.

SEE: AN ANIMAL THAT HAS A POUCH!

If you're a male SEA HORSE, you can expect to stay home and take care of the kids! The female lays eggs in a pouch on the male's body. After they hatch, Daddy takes care of the babies until they can fend for themselves.

CLOSE CALLS ON

When breathing equipment suddenly stops working—and you are deep beneath the ocean's surface. A whale the size of the Goodyear Blimp threatens to drag you to the bottom of the sea. Even the bravest underwater explorers face these kind of dangers in their adventures. Here are three of their stories.

A WHALE OF A TALE

DIVER TOM CAMPBELL knew what the call was about before he answered the phone. A whale, accidentally entangled in fishing nets off the California coast, needed help. Tom grabbed his gear and hurried out to meet other members from the whale rescue team.

The grey whale was exhausted and in pain. Every time Tom and his team tried to get near her, she would roll and dive. Finally divers were able to get close enough to start cutting the nets.

"But she went crazy every time someone touched her," Tom said. She'd thrash around the net, throwing divers out of the water with their masks and mouthpieces flying. But the real danger was she could plunge at any minute, dragging her rescuers down with her.

"We were losing daylight fast, and we had a lot of net to go," Tom remembers. Then suddenly the net popped, and the whale surged forward—free at last! Tom and his team cheered wildly. The last thing they saw was her huge tail as she disappeared in the ocean twilight.

DON'T HAVE A COW, MAN

UNDERWATER photographer Carl Kessler and his friends traveled to the South Pacific Islands to meet Dudley, a 500-pound dugong (sea cow). Dudley was famous because he liked to play with people. "We were in chest-deep water, and Dudley would swim up, stick his nose in our stomachs and toss us in the air, just like beach balls," Carl laughs. "It was great!"

But one day, Dudley decided to play a new game. He swam up to Carl, hugged him with his fins, pushed him underwater and pinned him to the bottom! "I was near feel from the surface, squashed in the sand by this massive animal. I knew if this moose didn't get off me, I'd drown."

Luckily, after a very long minute, Dudley got bored and swam away. Carl shot to the surface, "sputtering and coughing." Although he laughs about this now, he learned his lesson: "Even the tamest animals can surprise you."

Malfunction Junction

This is not the place to have any problems, Richard Kohler thought as he and his partner, Pete, dove toward the sunken ship. After a 12-hour boat ride to this wreck, the treasure hunters were anxious to fill their bags with china and other valuables.

They swam through tight turns and narrow passages before Richard spied a cabinet filled with loot. He was busy stuffing his treasure bag when he took a breath and sucked in cold, muddy water. He slowly tried to take another breath.

No air, just water. Panic!

He spit out his mouthpiece and gave Pete the out-of-air signal by drawing his hand across his throat. Richard's air hose had broken away from his mouthpiece. They had to get out of the wreck—fast.

They crawled slowly through the maze of twisted metal. Finally, they were safely on the surface. "I was never so glad to end a dive," Richard says. "But I grabbed my bag before we left; there was no way I was going to leave my treasure!"

NEXT STOP:

Henri Cosquer was in trouble. Deep trouble.

HE THOUGHT IT would be fun to explore the tiny passage he found in the underwater cliffs. He squirmed his way through the super-tight tunnel that twisted and turned through a rock wall. The slightest brush with the tunnel bottom made a blinding cloud of sand that his light couldn't pierce. He knew if he panicked he'd be trapped in this underwater coffin forever. And he had no idea how long the tunnel was.

Finally he found an opening where he could stand up. It was a huge cave. He took off his mask and mouthpiece, gulped air—then noticed something: Someone had been there before.

Top: Henri at the end of the tunnel. Bottom: Cameramen brave freezing water to get a good shot of the cave ceiling.

Top: Does this look like an 18,000-year-old drawing of an animal to you? Bottom: Henri's secret cave.

Human handprints were etched into the cave's wall. Next to them were charcoal drawings of extinct animals. Henri wanted to keep exploring, so he kept "his cave" a secret.

When three divers died in the undersea tunnel six years later, Henri knew he had to tell people about the cave. He showed it to French archaeologists. Their verdict: The cave drawings, made by prehistoric people, were 18,000 years old! Henri's cave is the only one with prehistoric art that has an undersea entrance.

The tunnel is so dangerous that it's been sealed. Now Henri's secret cave—and the amazing paintings he found—are forever off-limits to the world.

ORIENTE

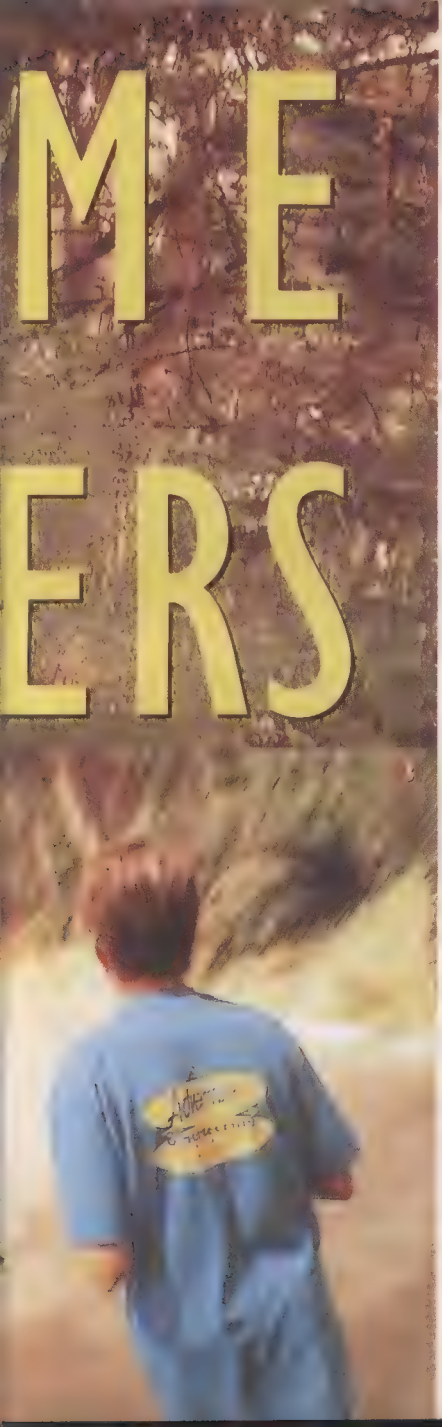
Greg started orienteering with his dad when he was 8, and he's been a champion in his age division in the Western States Orienteering Championships. "I like being out in nature," Greg says. "It's not the competition, but the fun of the race. I'm racing against the clock."



The Disney Adventures Orienteering* Team raced against expert orienteers in wild, unfamiliar territory filled with cannons, tanks and old Army barracks. Here's what happened....

Our awesome D.A. Orienteering Team included Joelene Ellis, Greg Fleishman, Bo Felix (all 12 years old) and Daniel Lowd (11). 1 The competition was held at San Francisco's Presidio, a historic Army base next to the Golden Gate Bridge.

All the competitors were given a topographic map (see box, Page 55), which they studied. 2 Their mission: find the course's 10 check-in points; punch a card to prove they'd found it; and finish the mile-long course faster than anyone else.

Excitement building, they had one last check of their compasses, then headed to the starting line. The starter called, "Start!" And they were off! 3

The D.A. team broke into pairs and started off, scanning

Orienteering is a sport in which you use a map and compass to find your way through unknown territory.

the landscape and looking for a road or a field to use as landmarks.

Partners Joelene and Daniel jogged quickly. An open area was marked on the map. "This is it!" Joelene yelled. But they weren't sure if the check-in point was to the right or the left of a nearby building. They tramped down a hill, through dried grass, but still couldn't find it. 4

Joelene frowned at the map—then spotted where they had gone off course.

"Over there!" she shouted, pointing to an old Army barrack. They dashed toward the check-in point to make up for lost time, and quickly punched in. 5

Meanwhile, Greg and Bo searched for their next check-in point 6 that was "on a tree near the tank." So they started looking for something large, round and filled with water. 7 They laughed when they saw the tree near an Army tank, the kind that rolls over battlefields and shoots shells. Every orienteering course has its surprises.

In the end, too much time had been lost and the D.A. Orienteering Team members weren't the first to cross the finish line. But they weren't disappointed. As Daniel put it: "You get to use your mind and your physical skills. It's addictive. And it's fun." –Sue Benson

A topographic map shows elevations or the height and depth of the land (that's how you know if you're heading up a hill or down a valley). The map also shows landmarks, such as fields, streams, buildings and roads, that an orienteer can use to find his or her way.

Hey.

Dozmo's bummin' 'cause he says I don't write about him enough. OK, Doz, you asked for it....

I went over to his house the other day. Let me just say this: My room is messy, but Dozmo's looks like The Wizard of Oz cyclone hit it. Bad.

And there was Dozmo, lying on his bed trying to burp. He told me that he read somewhere that you can't burp while lying on your back. For whatever reason, he didn't believe it, so he decided to prove that theory wrong. I noticed he had a six-pack of soda by the bed and he'd already downed four cans.

"Hey, Doz," I said. "Wanna rent a movie or something since it's raining?"

Dozmo didn't answer. Instead he asked, "Did you know that the distance from the inside of your elbow to your wrist is about the same as the length of your foot?"

Illustrations: Joe Rocco

"Let's get Predator 2," I said. "I've never seen it."

"See if it's true," said Doz. "Put your foot up to the inside of your arm."

I pretended that I didn't get what he was talking about.

"Like this," said Dozmo, sitting up. Before he could show me what he meant, I heard a rumble from his stomach and then out came the biggest, loudest, grossest burp you've ever heard. And he wonders why I never write about him. Hope you're happy now, Doz.

Lately a lot of you guys have been asking about weird body noises. I'm not gonna ask why, but here are the answers.

How come your stomach growls?
Michele Hopkins, 10
Rosemead, California

Although your stomach growls when you're hungry, it can also growl after a big meal. The sounds you hear are your stomach muscles churning stuff around—food, liquid, gas, digestive fluids—kind of like a mini-washing machine. This churning breaks down the food, making it easier to digest. Your stomach growls when you're hungry because it starts churning in anticipation of your next meal.

Why do people snore?
Mandy Haslam, 11
Lafayette, Louisiana

Snoring happens when people breathe through their mouths while they're sleeping. Air rushing in through the mouth causes the soft palate—the tissue in the roof of the mouth near the throat—to vibrate. This vibration is what makes all the noise. If somebody's mouth is really hanging open, their lips, cheeks and nostrils may vibrate, too. And snoring seems to be worse when people sleep on their backs.

Next month I'll tell you about Lizzie and Blubb trying to build a skyscraper. 'Til then, play hard and think deep.

One snail can chomp a head of lettuce in a single meal. But they don't always go for healthy food—they've been spotted munching house paint and dead rats. THE CARD KING

He hit three home runs in three swings in one World Series game; he whacked 563 home runs in his career; he's in the Baseball Hall of Fame; and he's even had a candy bar named after him. But did you know Reggie Jackson is also one of the world's biggest card collectors?

Q: How many cards do you own?
A: I have cases and cases. It would be in the thousands.
Q: How did you get started collecting?
A: I collected cards as a kid, but I really got into it when I was playing. During an all-star game, I went out of the game in the fifth inning and started getting other players' autographs.
Q: Where do you get your cards?
A: I get a lot of my cards in trades.
I've spent as much as $30,000 at one time on cards.
Q: What are some of your favorite cards?
A: I have the Goudey set from the '30s with Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Ted Williams. I guess my favorite set would be the '69 Topps because it has the last card of Mickey Mantle. Of course, another favorite is the first card to feature me.
Q: What's the most valuable card you own?
A: A Topps '52 Mickey Mantle.
It's worth about $35,000. I also have a '51 Bowman Mantle.
Q: Any advice for collectors?
A: Buy what you like!
